discovered, that like a cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, is beginning to loom up in the European horizon. Bismarck the inevitable, has asked of England the cession to Germany of the Island of Heligoland, as necessary for the protection of the German coast. Granville replies that England does not wish to sell, and in effect, that it is no affair of hers whether Germany needs the island or not. And so the matter stood at last accounts. The little Island of Heligo-450,562 land, which may be destined to render the " battle of Dorking " something more than the dream of a magazine writer, lies in the German ocean, about thirty-five miles from the mouth of the Elbe. It is only about a mile in length, and kundred persons. But though so very small, it is famed in history, and it is supposed to be the island mentioned by Tacitus, where the German goddess Hertha was worshiped. As early as the seventh century the inhabitants were converted to Christianity. Originally it formed a part of Schleswig Holstein, but was taken by the Danes 3,383 in 1714, and retained by them till 1807, when it passed into the hands of the English. England used it for a double purpose, as a naval station gled into Germany. An English garrison is that during the recent war it rendered essential aid to the naval operations of the French.
